MORGAN: Hey everyone, thanks for coming to campus today. We have two days left until submission, so we just need to make sure the final slides and draft are ready to go.

ALEX: (Types furiously on a laptop) Right. Well, I went ahead and restructured the entire intro section last night around 1:00 AM. The version Jordan put together was a bit wordy, so I completely rewrote it and changed our core arguments so it flows better for the final grade.

JORDAN: (Sighs, looks down at phone) Oh. Okay. I spent about four hours on that section yesterday, but... whatever you think is best, Alex.

ALEX: I mean, I had to fix it. We didn't have a solid final draft, and nobody was updating the shared document, so I just did it myself so we don't fail.

MORGAN: (Nervously laughing) Great, so the intro is done! Taylor, how is your section on the case study coming along?

TAYLOR: (Monotone, leaning back) It's fine. I put some bullet points in the doc, but honestly, Alex will probably rewrite them anyway to match the rest of the paper, so I didn't spend too much time polishing it.

ALEX: (Visibly frustrated) I wouldn't have to rewrite everything if people uploaded complete work on time! I feel like I'm carrying this whole project on my back while everyone else is just slacking off.

JORDAN: (Arms crossed, defensive) We aren't slacking off, Alex. Every time we write something or share an idea, you change it or make a decision without asking us. So why should we bother spending hours on something if you're just going to replace it near the deadline anyway?

ALEX: Because someone has to make sure we get a good grade!

MORGAN: (Interrupting awkwardly) Okay, okay, let's not get stressed! We're all tired. Let's just... Alex, why don't you finish writing the case study section since you have a specific vision for it? Jordan and Taylor, can you guys just proofread the formatting at the very end?

JORDAN: Fine. Whatever keeps the peace. (Closes laptop)

TAYLOR: Works for me. Just tell me when it's done.

ALEX: (Muttering) Unbelievable. Guess I'm doing the whole presentation draft again tonight...
